Telemedicine allows my provider to diagnose, consult, treat, and educate using interactive audio, video, or data communication about my treatment. I understand: I have a right to privacy with telemedicine under the same laws that protect the privacy of my medical information for in-person visits. Any information I share during my visit, is usually private. There are some exceptions, like having to report child, elder, and dependent adult abuse. If my provider thinks I am a danger to myself or others, they have the right to break privacy to prevent the threat of danger. While I may benefit from telemedicine, there is no guarantee that all treatment will be effective. There are risks unique to telemedicine. Some of these risks include the chance that communication by my provider could be disrupted, interrupted, or distorted by technical failures. Communication could be accessed by persons who are not permitted to have my medical information. Telemedicine treatment is different from in-person treatment and my provider may decide I would be better served by an in-person visit. I can stop my consent to telemedicine at any time by giving written notice. All of my questions have been
